This presentation will address why change is needed in the way we think about identity and selfhood in the family justice and related fields. Article 8 of the UNCRC provides children with the right to preserve their identity. However, this is currently a right hidden in plain sight, largely unrecognised by law, policy and practice. Yet, the preservation of a child's identity cannot be frozen in time. It should apply to the more static features of identity already identified within Article 8 (name, nationality, family relations) as well as those aspects that arise in response to significant life events and transformations experienced by children within and outside of their families (e.g., gender, out-of-home care, forced marriage, relocation, abduction, migration, detention).

This presentation will lift the veil on family law and consider how it can better address child identity issues. A more expansive approach to Article 8 will lead to identity becoming a more explicit consideration in relevant cases before the courts and other decision-makers. Children need to be actively involved in shaping their own identity and their views on this should be ascertained and taken into account in legal decision-making processes. We also reflect on the possibility of a General Comment to clarify Article 8's scope and interpretation, whether identity should feature in child-related statutory enactments, and how to teach family law to better equip lawyers, judges, related professionals, and society going forward.

10:05 – 11:10: Session 1A - Rethinking communication to get your point across

Speaker: Brodie Riordan, Executive Coach, Psychologist and Author

You already possess a wide range of communication approaches that you can use with clients and colleagues, and chances are, you overuse approaches in your comfort zone. In this session, get a refresher on the full range of communication approaches that you possess, ranging from directive (telling, instructing, directing) to non-directive (asking, listening, coaching) and everything in between. You'll leave the session with tangible, actionable strategies for identifying and using the best approach for the situation and what you want to accomplish with your clients and colleagues.

Reminder to All: Those who think they do not need this brush up on communication skills are probably those who need it most!

10:05 -11:10: Session 1 B – Topic presented by the Relocation Committee

Moderators: Anna Worwood, England and Wales
Hassan Elhais, United Arab Emirates

Speakers: Zofia Józefowicz-Paszewska, Poland

11:35 – 12:40: Session 2A - Rethinking communication to get your point across (repeat)

11:35 – 12:40: Session 2B – Forced Marriage

Forced marriage is one of the most complex and sensitive challenges in family law. Often sitting at the intersection of cultural practices, human rights, and cross-border legal frameworks, forced marriage is an issue which affects some of the most vulnerable members of society.

This session will explore the evolving response to forced marriage around the globe, examining how different jurisdictions define, prevent, and remedy such situations, as well as touching on the practical difficulties for family lawyers and their clients.
