Profile

Nominated as Chambers & Partners Family Law Junior of the Year in 2024, Will specialises in financial disputes on divorce and relationship breakdown. He is renowned for his expertise in complex financial claims, as well as international jurisdiction and forum disputes in relation to both finance and children cases. He also has wider experience in cases involving complex disclosure and national security issues, privacy and human rights. Will was appointed in 2024 to the Attorney General's A Panel of Junior Counsel to the Crown (the highest level of government panel), and is frequently instructed by the government in cases involving family law and wider areas of public and human rights law. He has represented the Department for Education, the Attorney General, the FCDO and overseas territories. In early 2025 he was appointed by the Attorney General to appear as amicus curiae in the open justice appeal concerning whether the family court judges who had presided over proceedings prior to the murder of Sara Sharif should be granted anonymity (Tickle and another v BBC and others [2025] Fam 105).
